

Two New Projects to Showcase!

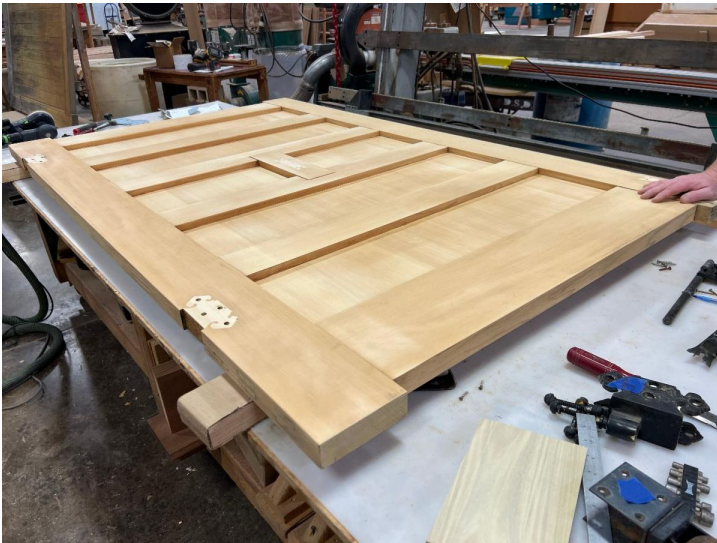

Dubuque, Iowa is home to the Dubuque Arboretum and Botanical Gardens, a beautiful nature reserve founded in 1975. Jackson "Mac" Marshall, a lifelong Dubuque resident known for his work as an Army intelligence officer in World War I, donated 51 acres of land to the city under the condition that it would always be used as a park. They agreed, and Marshall Park was born. Now, five decades later, Adams Architectural Millwork has become part of the arboretum's rich history.

Protecting History for a Nature Preserve

Recently, we had the opportunity to restore two door slabs, shown above, for the Japanese Garden at the Dubuque Arboretum. These two door slabs were initially installed in 2003 when the attraction first opened. Since then, they were subjected to heavy wear and tear from the elements. To ensure the doors could be brought back to their former glory, we sanded them down until the original finish and stain were removed. From there, we filled any cracks and reapplied stain and finish to make these door slabs look brand new!

Restoration Work on a Rural Gothic Church

Evangelical Church of Peace in Brownsville, Minnesota has a rich 140-year history of being the home church to a small but diverse congregation. Located directly alongside a county road, this unassuming rural church was built in the Rural Gothic church style, which, when first constructed, made a bold statement on the landscape. Due to its age, it is getting some well-deserved updates in the form of 11 Mahogany sashes, each with frosted glass and tru-divided lites!

In addition to the eleven sashes made during this project, we also fabricated double doors with crosses engraved into the middle panels!
